

About one in nine people worldwide are supported by migrant workers' remittances

What migrants send home represents only 15 per cent of their income.

The money they receive is key in helping millions out of poverty, as it can represent a large part of household income.

Remittances, in particular, can help achieve at least seven of the 17 SDGs.

Half of remittances go directly to rural areas where the world's poorest people live.

They are three times more important than international aid and counting.

Remittances remain expensive to send.

(UN, 2019)